Dear Ken:

Thank you for writing to Bruce Fancher, President of Evolution Online Systems, via electronic mail.

Although the volume of mail prevents Mr. Fancher from personally reviewing each message, be assured that your concerns, ideas, and suggestions have been read carefully, and a detailed report of the mail is provided to Mr. Fancher on a regular basis. Your message will be brought to his attention as part of that report.

If you are seeking information about Evolution Online Systems, Inc. and its products and services, it can be found on our World Wide Web home page. This new World Wide Web service provides a single point of access to all available information about the company. Evolution's home page can be accessed at:

<http://www.evolution.com>

Though the new Web server provides access to Evolution's documents and publications, we will continue to provide these by e-mail. To receive instructions, please send a message to the following address (do not "reply" to the memo you are now reading):

info@evolution.com

In the body of your message, type "Send Info" (without quotes); no other text should be included, specifically message headers or signature lines (.sig files). The instructions will be sent to you automatically.

Also, we now have a FAQ (Frequently Asked Questions) document. (The FAQ file is approximately 45K in size; you should check with your service provider to ensure that you can receive files of this size.) This FAQ address is an autoresponder only; any comment sent to this address will not be acknowledged. In order to obtain this, you should send an e-mail message to:

faq@evolution.com

All of us at Evolution are excited about the growth of the global Internet, and we look forward to future developments. Your continued interest and participation are very important to us.

Sincerely,

David Buchwald
Director of Correspondence
